Soil and water analysis workshop

our college is located in a rural area where agriculture is the primary source of income, the Department of Chemistry has established a certificate course in "Soil and Water Analysis" for students. Because of their financial circumstances, students in rural areas are uninformed of the state of the land and water utilized in agriculture. The productive value of soil is lowered when excessive fertilizers, insecticides, and pesticides are used. The yield productivity suffers as a result of this. The main objectives of the workshop are as under:

To follow up the actual analysis of soil and water samples for the development of practical skills within the students.

Discuss concerns regarding the course.

To develop effective Methodology for soil and water analysis.

To create a community of learners and produce environment for the students.

The Department of Chemistry has arranged a syllabus framing workshop for the above- mentioned certificate course in order to establish an adequate syllabus for this course. The subject experts were called from other institute as well as our college. The suggestions put forward from discussion are summarized as follows:

Syllabi should explain why, what, and how well students should learn to collect and analyze the soil and water sample.

In order to accomplish so, syllabuses must include a meaningful selection and organization of content, as well as clearly identify the subject's major learning objectives and results.

The formulation of content selection and learning outcomes should reflect appropriately the competencies that one wishes to build in students.

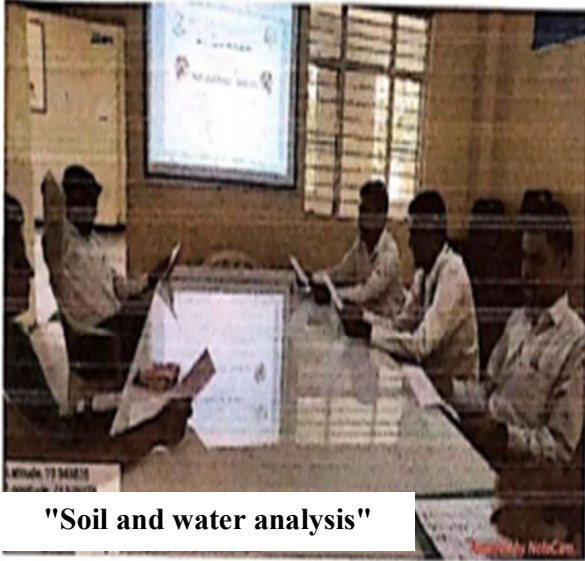

Higher-order intellectual abilities and competences, as well as social, emotional, physical, spiritual, and other capacities, should be emphasized.

At the end of the workshop the course coordinator expressed vote of thanks for the participants for the active and productive participation.

BRIEF REPORT
One Day Workshop on Biodiversity

Workshops on snake bites, tiger attacks etc. were organized in the college under People Biodiversity Training Workshop. Akole taluka has a high number of snakes due to its forest cover. India has the highest share of morbidity and mortality due to snakebite, with about 46,000 deaths and many more illnesses per year.

As most of the snakes in our country are non-venomous, most of the deaths are due to fear of snakes. Therefore, there is a need to assess the general knowledge about snakes, preventive and first aid measures for accidental snakebites that can reduce the incidence of fatal snakebites.

Objectives:

1. To spread awareness about the snakes
2. To enlighten participants about the various snakes (venomous and non-venomous) found in India
3. To ascertain the knowledge about first aid and treatment
4. To assess the knowledge about the symptoms of snake
5. To eradicate myths about snakes among the participants
6. What precautions should be taken against tiger attacks. How to take care of this.
7. Efforts to increase the number of tigers

"Soil and water analysis"

Our college is situated in a tribal area. Where agriculture is the primary source of income, the college has introduced a certificate course in "Soil and Water Analysis" for students. Due to their economic situation, rural students are not aware of the condition of land and water used for agriculture. Excessive use of fertilizers, pesticides and insecticides reduces the productive value of the soil. As a result, the productivity of the product suffers.

The main objectives of the workshop are as follows.

Pursuing practical analysis of soil and water samples to develop practical skills among students.
Discuss curriculum issues.

Developing effective methods for soil and water analysis.

Creating a community of students and creating an environment for students.

The Department of Chemistry has arranged a Curriculum Framing Workshop for the above mentioned certificate courses to establish an adequate syllabus for this course. Subject matter experts were invited from other institutes as well as our college. Following is a summary of the suggestions raised from the discussion.

The curriculum should explain why, what, and how/how well students should learn to collect and analyze soil and water samples.

To accomplish this, courses must include a meaningful selection and organization of content, as well as clearly identify the main learning objectives and outcomes of the subject.

The choice of content and the formulation of learning outcomes should appropriately reflect the competencies sought to be developed in students.

Emphasis should be placed on high levels of intellectual ability and potential as well as social, emotional, physical, spiritual and other abilities.

At the end of the workshop the course coordinator thanked the participants for their active and fruitful participation.
